Imagery as a Vehicle for Abstract Notions. Non-realistic literature frequently leans on vivid and evocative imagery to portray abstract concepts. For instance, in T.S. Eliot's "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock", the depiction of "yellow fog" and "the evening is spread out against the sky" crafts a surreal and disorienting ambiance, mirroring Prufrock's sense of isolation and existential uncertainty. This use of imagery enables the writer to communicate intricate emotions and ideas in a tangible and sensory manner.
